WAGES .- It is always interesting to compare the material condition of one people to that of another, and it is particularly pleasant to do so when the result of such an investigation shows all the advantages to be on the side of those who institute the comparison. That the workingmen of this country may have the satisfaction of knowing they are better off than their brethern elsewhere, we extract from the Quarterly Review for July some information about the earnings of English mechanics and laborers. In 1859, the wages of those engaged in the various occupations, here named, were as follows:

In cotton factories, steam-engine tenders received, per week, $7. 20; power-loom weavers (mostly women) $2. 56. In the silk | and is in the midst of a healthy neighborhood, well | factories, mill-men and throwsters received, per week. $4, 08; spinners (young men and (a)vs) $2, 40; weavers 4, 80. In other mechanical trades workmen were TWO THOUSAND TWO HUNDRED ACRES, paid as follows: Smiths and wheelrights, per week, $7, 68; painters $6, 96; erectors $7, 92; bricklayers $7, 92 in summer, and, $7, 20 in winter; stonemasons $7, 20 in summer, and $6, 48 in winter, brickmoulders $12, 00 in summer, and $5, 04 in

But the highest rates of wages are those which prevail in the iron trade. "It must, however, be "premised," says the Quarterly, "that the wages "are for a week of straightforward, heavy work, "without an hour's loss of time, for change of "orders, or any casualty whatever." In the Puddling Mills, Puddlers received, per week, $10, 08; puddler's underhands, 4, 56; rollers, 14, 52; roller's beloers, $7.20. It is only in the iron works though, that men earn such wages, and the article from which we are quoting speaks of the extraordinary remuneration paid to this class of "workmen" as something exceptional. "In the "agricultural counties the average wages of "laborers range from $2.16 to $2.88 per week." About $150 per annum, therefore, is earned by the farm hand, and about $350 each, per annum, by the great mass of mechanics. The following instances will give some idea of the income which can be earned by those pursuing other avocations. The salaries of "certified teachers" in the National Schools are under $500 per annum, and those of "uncertified teachers" are under $350. A Dissenting congregation at Colchester engaged its minister at $6 per week. The average pay of banker's clerks is not $700 per annum. It must not be supposed that the mechanics and laborers of England are now working for lower wages then they have been in the habit of earning heretofore. On the contrary, it is shown that wages have steadily risen in almost every department of business within the past twenty years. The wages of painters, for instance, have increased 20 per cent, since 1839, and those of bricklayers and stone-masons about 16 per cent., while those of the workmen in the cotton cent, within the same period. Nor is it on rates paid are so moderate, for a leading ment weather, will take place on the next fair day.

Richard Corbin, residing at Moss Neck, and S. manufacturer has stated "that at least 20,-(80) additional operatives—men women and children—are required in Lancashire alone to enable the existing mills, and those in course of erection, to be worked satisfactorily." When it is remembered also, that while men have been earning more money, the "prices of nearly all kinds of food have been considerably diminished;" it is manifest that the laboring population of England is in a better condition than it has ever been before. We suppose there are few American mechanics who are not now receiving for their labor higher wages than are paid for similar services in England, although business has been dull here for the last year or two, and their earnings are much lower than they expect to receive in future. When, therefore, we add to the excess of their receipts, what they save in food and houserent, both of which are far cheaper here than in England, it is evident that the condition of the workman here is a very enviasans of England.—Baltimore Exchange. THE MODERN CAMILLE .-- While the world has grouned over the theatrical sorrows of an imaginary Camille, it seems to be entirely unconscious that another Camille-a brilliant, suffering, sorrowing, real Camille-is flickering out the last of life's candles in its midst, with just the chance that it will linger on and on, and expire in the socket, or be suddenly blown out before the last and repulsive stages of its glimmering and fitful existence have transpired. There is only one natural end to such a life, and that is wretchedness, despair, and then death .-Death, frequently, in what should be the prime friendship, or the loving sympathies of family ties; death embittered by the consciousness of an ill spent life, of abuses of blessings, of wasted talents, death in fine, without hope, and made doubly fearful by the pangs of remorse. From such a death we would wish our worst enemy to be delivered, much more a woman-a woman, toc, with all the splended qualities which the romancer has assigned to her class-brilliant in intellect, generous in impulse, loving to friends, savage to foes, her own worst and most relentless enemy. Such a woman is Lola Montez, now suffering under an attack of paralysis, which threatens to deprive her of life. It seems cruel, but we almost wish it would do so at once, otherwise it can only prove the first distinct step towards the sad ness and horror of the end we have described. Sinning much, but suffering more, her virines are at leasther own, and her faults mainly the result of strong passions and a will wholly uncontrolled, she is a fit subject for those rivers of tears and throbbing emotions which have been so freely expended upon her false stage representative, and for the ble one as compared with that of the arti-

unmoved, on the fifth scene of the last act of our living tragedy! From splendid house to furnished apartments, from floor to single room, from room to room, and finally to die alone in the garret, or the cellar; such, we hope, is not the fate reserved for poor Lora Montez. Better, much better, to die now, while the echoes of admiration and applause are still ringing in her ears while there are still some triends who cherish her, spite the sbrug of the world's shoulders, or the slander of the world's tongue, and before the withering hand of Library, nearly 5,100. poverty has laid its pale and haggard touch upon her. Better to sleep trusting, at the "death scene?" Surely not looking
